

GRAND JURY APPROVES WORK

New Being Done on Turnpikes and Suggests That City Imitate the County.

The recent grand jury in its report to the Circuit Court, endorsed in strong terms the work now being done on the various pikes of the county. While not specifically mentioned in the report, several members of the jury, in talking to us, especially complimented the work done this year on the Winchester pike, Grassy Lick pike, Judy and Flint Rock pike and Mt. Sterling and Owingsville pike. The report predicts bright things for the future and is as follows:

Montgomery Circuit Court, September Term, 1915. Hon. Wm. A. Young, Circuit Judge: The Grand Jury respectfully report that they have been in session six days and after diligent inquiry have returned into court indictments in all cases where evidence was sufficient. They have investigated the condition of the county jail, court house and the records of the County and Circuit Clerk's offices and find them all in first class condition.

They have examined the reports of the officers and find them to be correct in so far as they are able to ascertain.

They desire to especially commend the methods now employed by the county road engineer in the reconstruction of the various turnpikes of the county; if these methods are continued there seems to be no good reason why all of the turnpikes of the county will not in a comparatively short time, be in excellent condition.

The unpaved streets of the city of Mt. Sterling are not in good condition and we believe that if the authorities of the city would employ the same methods in repairing these streets now used by the county authorities, a substantial improvement would result.

We attach hereto list of witnesses who have been summoned to appear before the grand jury and have failed to do so.

Respectfully submitted,
JOHN S. FRAZER, Foreman.

AUTOMOBILE KILLS CHILD

Serious Accident Happens in Central Part of City and is Witnessed By Several.

The first serious automobile accident happened in Mt. Sterling Tuesday afternoon about 2:30 o'clock when a machine driven by Mr. James Spratt ran over and killed instantly Little Clara Frances Watson, four-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Watson. From the best information we were able to obtain from talking with a couple of people who said they witnessed the accident, it occurred as follows: Mr. Spratt came down High street from the east and in making the turn to Maysville street made a wide turn to the west side of Maysville street. It seems that the little girl, in company with Katherine Holliday, had been playing in the Court House yard and had been sliding down the terrace and as the automobile approached they had just come down same and had run into the street, evidently not seeing the machine. The little Watson child was killed instantly and the Holliday child knocked down and her dress torn in two or three places, but she was not injured. It is a most regrettable affair, and Mr. and Mrs. Watson have the heartfelt sympathy of everyone.

THE GODDESS

SYNOPSIS.

Professor Stilliter, psychologist, and Gordon Barclay, millionaire, plan to preach to the world the gospel of efficiency through a young and beautiful woman who shall believe that she is a heaven-sent messenger. They kidnap the orphaned little Amesbury girl, playmate of Tommy Steele, and conceal her in a cavern, in care of a woman, to be molded to their plan as she grows up. Fifteen years elapse. Tommy is adopted by Barclay, but loses his heirship and on a hunting trip discovers Celestia. Stilliter takes Celestia to New York. Tommy follows, she gets away from both of them, and her real work begins. At Barclay's invitation she meets a dozen of the business barons who are converted to her new gospel. She attends a ball and makes an impression on the society world. Tommy joins the labor ranks. Tommy Potiphar and is rescued from a lynching party by Celestia, who under Stilliter's influence, refuses to speak to him. She prevents a massacre of strikers.

ELEVENTH INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER XVIII.

That so many of the strikers had had the narrowest kind of an escape from being blown to pieces by dynamite did not make their feelings for Kehr and his men any friendlier, but one thing was certain. If harm came to the girl who had risked her life to warn them of their danger it would have to come to her over their dead bodies.

Wherever she went among the strikers she was welcomed with a kind of gallant adoration. Something about her seemed, when she entered a room, to pull the rudest and the most ignorant men to their feet. Everywhere she went she preached her gospel, softened hearts and made men and women hopeful of better things. And presently only those who were naturally bloodthirsty and who loved violence for its own sake talked openly of attacking the stockade. It seemed to Celestia that the strikers' demands were not unjust, and she determined to end the strike by persuading Kehr and the men he represented to meet their demands.

Elections were coming on, and the best way to secure the labor vote was to see that labor's envelope was better filled than ever before. With a new form of government in control of the nation's most disinterested and able men there would be such a saving of national waste that doubling the pay of every laborer in the country would be but a drop in the bucket.

Tommy could not see any possible good in Celestia's form of millennium. He felt that, innocently, of course, and with the best intentions, she was trying to betray labor into the hands of capital, and he fought her doctrine tooth and nail. But what she seemed to offer was so glittering and alluring to the poor and needy that Tommy's opposing arguments found few listeners in Bitumen.

Celestia preached that government of the people by the people and for the people had been proved a gigantic failure, for two excellent reasons (1), it isn't by the people, and (2) it isn't for the people. The fathers who set down some very noble aspirations in black and white were instantly succeeded by politicians, who twisted their aspirations to their own ends. We are today a government of the people by the politicians and for the politicians. Patriotism, if it isn't dead, has gone to sleep. There are patriotic Virginians, patriotic Vermonters, too, but there are very few patriotic Americans.

No business run as this United States is run could possibly be a success. No employee of such a business could be blamed for failing in respect for his employers or in loyalty to them. So, do we want our country to be respectable and a success or don't we? Let it be run with the same American efficiency with which the Standard Oil company has been run, and nobody will be poor and no part of any city will be dirty and full of disease.

If there were no waste there would be plenty of money for everybody, or at least of the things money can buy. Celestia was insistent on this, and personally I am hanged if I don't think she was right. We waste everything—raw material, finished product, health and brains.

In the face of Kehr's stubbornness it was not easy to make progress toward a settlement of the strike, and at last Celestia telegraphed to Gordon Barclay and asked for definite power to speak for the coal companies and treat with the labor leaders.

His answer was a flying trip to Bitumen. He was very sharp with Kehr, humbled him and browbeat him, caused Gundersdorf and the other leaders to be released, and then, after a long, secret conference with Professor Stilliter, he gave Celestia the power she asked for.

Before returning to New York he sent for Gundersdorf et al, made a personal peace with them, and obtained their political allegiance.

"Celestia," he told them, "is right. The troubles between labor and capital are only the symptom of the great national wastage that has gone on since the beginning of things. We must give up electing men to high office as promises of efficiency, and elect only men with records of efficiency. We must be a nation, and no longer a collection of states pulling the government every which way for local interests. We must see to it that the country is run like a trust bank or a great industry."

And he showed them how he believed that Celestia's system in question would wipe discontent from the face of the country.

"Celestia," he said, "has been empowered to settle this strike. In her judgment you are entitled to what you have asked for, and you will get it. But labor will find no permanent content under present conditions. I look to your individual and collective support for the new constitution. I believe that as a platform it will sweep the country in November, for its advantages to both labor and capital are so obvious that these two will be on the same side for once and henceforth, and when they are on the same side there is no resisting them."

CHAPTER XIX.

Only Tommy and Mrs. Gundersdorf held out against Celestia's influence. Tommy had never been affected by her hypnotic sway, and Mrs. Gundersdorf had devised a trick to thwart it. Having learned that there was something in Celestia's eye, some power which she could neither fathom nor resist, Mrs. Gundersdorf maintained her own independence in thought and action by the simple expedient of never meeting Celestia's eye.

Mrs. Gundersdorf was violently opposed to Celestia's theories. This opposition was not arrived at by elaborate mental process. The two women loved the same man. And the man very obviously loved Celestia (for when he wasn't with her he was trying his best to be with her). This was enough to place Mrs. Gundersdorf on any side of any question if only it was the opposite to Celestia's. Twice, when Celestia was addressing meetings of strikers (in interest of peace and progress), Mrs. Gundersdorf succeeded in creating such violent disturbance that she had to be removed forcibly from the room.

The strikers' favorite place for meeting was a large, shabby dance hall, in the meanest and most squalid section of Bitumen. Having been ejected from this hall, Mrs. Gundersdorf stood upon the outer steps, a picture of impotent and jealous rage.

A young woman, who, from her plain, neat costume rather suggested that she might be a lady's maid, and whose features were not distinctly visible owing to a thick veil, turned from perusing a bill poster which announced to the passerby the purpose of the meeting, at that moment in progress, to look at Mrs. Gundersdorf.

Mrs. Gundersdorf in turn eyed the stranger, and her rage gave place gradually to curiosity. Neatly and smartly dressed young women were very rare in Bitumen.

"Is the meeting over?" asked the stranger presently.

Mrs. Gundersdorf shook her head. "Not likely to be as long as there's a fool left to listen. When she gets through speaking they yell for her until she has to speak again. Ever hear her?"

Mrs. Gundersdorf shrugged her vigorous shoulders with contempt. "I never have," said the stranger. "I think I don't want to."

"Then what brings you to Bitumen? People are pouring in from all around to hear what she says. There don't seem to be any reason for coming to Bitumen."

"But she doesn't seem to have impressed you favorably?" "Me! Hush! I didn't say she hasn't got good looks of a kind, but what a man can see in a nobby pambly, goody goody like her gets me. Well, I'm going to move on. So long!"

The stranger hesitated, then simply followed and overtook Mrs. Gundersdorf.

"Do you mind if I walk with you?" "I—I was going your way."

"How do you know which way I was going?"

"I mean the way you are starting to do." The stranger laughed frankly. "And that's not the whole truth. I came to Bitumen to find out certain things. I'm a sort of reporter and new at the business. The boss told me there was a big story here and for me to go and get it. He only gave me a few hints to go on, and—"

"You want to ask me some questions? Is that it? Well, fire ahead."

"Of course," said the stranger, "anything to do with Mr. Gordon Barclay is a headline for the newspapers, especially now that he has taken up with the girl from heaven, and is advocating her policies. You must know all about everything that goes on. You see, it means such a lot to me, getting this story. Can't you help me out?" "Are you a friend of Tommy Barclay?"

"After hesitation, the stranger said: 'Yes.'"

"So am I," said Mrs. Gundersdorf, "and that being so, I guess we've got a talk coming to us. Let's go in here."

A moment later Mrs. Gundersdorf and the stranger faced each other across a dirty table in a dirty windowed room that smelled of drink, and a bartender with an evil face had served them with a horrible mixture of whiskey and water. Mrs. Gundersdorf gulped down a large mouthful with apparent relish, but for the stranger one small sip seemed to be enough.

"We can talk straighter," said Mrs. Gundersdorf, "if you'll lift that veil."

The stranger hesitated, then obediently turned up the veil.

"I guess," said Mrs. Gundersdorf, after a moment of admiring scrutiny, "we'll unswallow the story about your being a reporter. You're a friend of Tommy Barclay and you belong in the same walks of life that he does."

Mary nodded. "Well, I'm Mrs. Gundersdorf. I'm the woman that tried to put him in Dutch."

Miss Blackstone's eyes blazed with sudden interest.

"But you—you don't hate him any more?"

"Me. I hate him just the same as you do. Neither more nor less. But I'll tell you we do hate, if you don't know. We don't hate each other because he's passed us both up. We're in the same boat. We hate her."

"We have good cause to."

Mrs. Gundersdorf's shapely hand shot across the table, and Mary Blackstone clasped it for a moment in hers.

"I've told you my name," said Mrs. Gundersdorf.

"I am Mary Blackstone."

"Geel!" exclaimed Mrs. Gundersdorf, "but I thought she'd be dressed different. How do I know you're not stringing me again?"

"These are my maid's clothes," said Mary. "I didn't want to be recognized."

Mrs. Gundersdorf still looked a little doubtful. And Mary, smiling a little, touched the neck of her dress and disclosed a string of pearls, each pearl perfect and not much smaller than a cherry.

"I believe you," said Mrs. Gundersdorf. "But cover that thing up. You don't want anybody in Bitumen to know you've got that."

"If I lost it," said Mary, "and the right person found it, I wouldn't care." She spoke in a cold, defiant sort of way, and then fastened her dress once more over the necklace.

"You think," said Mrs. Gundersdorf, "that if it wasn't for her—you'd stand a chance?"

"Don't you feel a little that way, too, Mrs. Gundersdorf. You are wonderfully good looking, you know; and Mr. Barclay seems to have cast in his lot with labor. It looks as if you'd stand the better chance of us two, doesn't it?"

Mrs. Gundersdorf shrugged her shoulders.

"We couldn't stand any less chance that we do now. And the oftener he sees her, the less that chance gets."

"If she really comes from heaven—"

"The quicker she goes back the better."

Mary laughed a cold little laugh.

"I'd not be the one to hold her back by the skirts."

"Nor I."

"But," said Mrs. Gundersdorf, "if she went to heaven, and anyone in this town had a hand in sending her, and got found out"—she shuddered—"that person would be torn to ribbons."

"Where does she live?"

"They've fixed tents for her and her party just outside the town. They call it 'Headquarters of Celestia—the Girl From Heaven.'"

"Who is her party?"

"There's Professor Stilliter—I guess she goes to him when she's in a fix for what to say next. There's a kind of half-witted fellow, named Douglas. She keeps a couple of secretaries going day and night. There's a cook and servants, lots of people. Wouldn't be easy to come at her."

"Have you any idea," asked Miss Blackstone, "how much these pearls I showed you are worth? No idea? A woman could live on the income. She could wear pretty clothes and have a servant. If she had a husband she didn't like, she could afford to divorce him. Do you know what I'd do if anyone should come to me and tell me that a certain person was never going to get in anybody's way again? I'd give those pearls to that person gladly, or I'd lose them where that person could find them."

"What's the use of wishes when your heart's sore?"

"No use at all," admitted Miss Blackstone. "I'm going to move on. So long!"

Kehr Had Assented to the Settlement of the Strike.

Blackstone, "and still I'd rather be rich and heart-broken than poor and heart-broken, wouldn't you?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Gundersdorf, thoughtfully, "I would."

Miss Blackstone rose, her hand at her throat where the pearls lay.

"I hope," she said, "that I shall have the pleasure of seeing you again—soon. What do you think?"

"Oh," said Mrs. Gundersdorf, "I shouldn't wonder."

And she, too, rose from the table, with a look in her eyes at once troubled and resolved.

CHAPTER XX.

And now the town of Bitumen became, as one paper put it, the center of a new world.

Kehr had assented grimly to the settlement of the strike on Celestia's terms. He had come out for Celestia's policies. And because of his very grinning and stubbornness his late enemies began to see that he would be a tower of strength to any cause which he should espouse. In that town, where a week ago his life would not have been worth a moment's purchase, he was already being talked of as the next United States senator from Pennsylvania.

Special correspondents had begun to flock into Bitumen. Many who came to jeer stayed in a state of great wonderment, and began presently to number themselves among the faithful.

Stop for a moment and try to realize the power for good or evil, the collective power, of the newspapers of America. If they are not the whole voice of the people, they are alone that part of it which can make itself heard. If we have any wisdom as a nation, we owe it to the newspapers. Likewise we owe it to them that we are not always wise or on the side of righteousness.

Celestia then began to develop strength in the newspapers. She was to develop so much before her course was run as is hardly believable. Already the idea of changing our government was no longer a news headline, but a definite and by no means uncomfortable thought in the minds of men. Some newspapers detested the thought because it was new; others welcomed and embraced it because it was new. Still others, and in the end these became her most powerful supporters, took some such attitude as this:

"You may argue for the new gospel; you may argue against it. You may call it treason; you may call it progress; but when all is said and done, certain facts will shine out clear as crystal."

"As a people we ought to be happy; we are not. Millions who ought to be clean and healthy are dirty and sick. There is enough money for everybody. A very small portion of this is in the hands of the efficient few; the rest is nowhere, being lost, wasted, thrown overboard."

"In those whom we elect to high office two qualities only seem necessary—inefficiency and selfishness."

"What are we going to do about it?"

CHAPTER XXI.

A certain scientific gentleman (of fiction), having constructed a very large monster, in the image of man, brought it to life—and it got away from him and raised all kinds of Cain.

Celestia was no Frankenstein; but Professor Stilliter no longer found in her the apt and docile pupil of earlier days. He found it harder and harder to control her. More and more she thought for herself. If Stilliter could have been entirely eliminated from her life, her life at least for a time must have gone on very much as it was going on. She believed firmly in what she preached. She believed that she came from heaven, and that she had come to make the world better, safer to live in, cleaner and happier.

Tommy argued with her so incessantly and often so intolerantly that if she hadn't been in love with the mere sound of his voice she couldn't have stood it.

Late one afternoon she came home to her little city of tents, very tired, and lay down in a hammock under a shady tree to rest. In spite of her celestial origin, Celestia was very human, and just as attractive to a sticky house fly as any other human being. Such a house fly made a dead-set for her, and she found it impossible to rest. She went into the headquarters tent, which was the biggest and coolest, and the day's work being over and the secretaries gone, tried to rest there. And couldn't. She was tired and discouraged. She was tired because she had been doing too much, and she was discouraged because she was tired. Tommy had an uncanny faculty for dropping in upon her when she was in those moods. Possibly Freddie, the Ferret, had something to do with this faculty, for he worshipped Tommy. So that as it may, Freddie was about the tents when Celestia came in, tired. He vanished presently, and a little later Tommy appeared, looking very brown and manly and refreshing.

Celestia heard his voice and called out to him, a little petulantly perhaps. Tommy poked his head in through the door of the big tent and greeted her loudly and joyously. The moment she saw him she felt a little rested.

Meanwhile Professor Stilliter, in his tent, reading a deep and thick book on "The Psychology of Government," heard the two voices—and couldn't read another word.

"Celestia," said Tommy, "you look so little and helpless and unprotected, curled among those curtains, that I'm tempted to pick you up, put you in my pocket and take you somewhere where you can't get into any more mischief."

"I dare you to try!" exclaimed Celestia.

Then they both laughed and Tommy advanced into the tent.

So much articulate speech Professor Stilliter overheard, but no more. After that there came to him only the murmurs of one voice or the other, sounds which to a jealous man were more provocative of impotent rage than actual words would have been.

He stared at the book in which he was no longer able to read a word and "ate his heart out," as the saying is.

"One of these days," he thought, "she'll say 'yes' to that meddling fool and leave all my fine schemes high and dry. If I really thought that, and sometimes I really do think it, I'd—"

Now the professor took off his eyeglasses and thought very hard indeed and looked very horrid and blind and evil. Every now and then he murmured to himself: "My God, why not?"

"So you dare me to try, do you?" said Tommy.

Her eyes sparkled now; she was feeling very much rested.

"Yes, I do."

Quick as any cat the young man leaped over and picked her up from the midst of the curtains as easily as if she had been a kitten, and so held her almost at the level of his chin. And now Celestia felt completely rested. It was as if she had received refreshing strength from Tommy's strong arms.

"Oh," he said, "if a deluded nation could behold you now!"

"Put me down," she exclaimed, "somebody might see us."

"Of course they might," comforted Tommy. "The tent flaps are wide open. But I don't care if I never put you down."

"Tommy!" she exclaimed.

"I should worry!" said Tommy, but when she began to struggle he put her down.

"And what did you mean," she asked, her great eyes flashing, but not with anger, and her cheeks flaming, "by a deluded nation?"

"You don't look as if you could," said he, "but you've deluded several million people out of a hundred million, and it looks as if you were going to defend the rest. But you'll be sorry enough for yourself when they find out they've been deluded! Celestia, I've the most love for you that anybody in the world has for anybody. Isn't that enough? You love me, don't you?"

"Yes, I do."

"You ought to trust the man you love. You ought to trust his judgment."

"I do about love. But—"

"Oh I know the rest that is coming. You think you see clear, but you don't. You're blind as a bat. But some day you'll see—you'll see when your own chance of happiness is gone forever and your theories have brought more evil on mankind than it endures now."

"Tommy," said Celestia with a shudder and great seriousness, "how can you love me and think me evil?"

"You evil! You precious lamb!" She waved aside the arms that had gone impulsively out to her.

"If in your judgment I am going to bring more misery into the world than I am evil in your judgment, how can you reconcile that with loving me?"

"Celestia," said Tommy, "if you select such a man as my father (much as I love him) president, give the power of making the laws to such men as Kehr, whom you are talking of for senator—why, he's placarded all over town—why, you'll have an efficient government. I don't deny that, but mark me, it will be an efficiency that will begin at home! Those who are rich now will be richer, and there will be more of them; those who are poor now will be poorer and more wretched."

"You assert and assert and assert, but you don't reason."

"I don't reason! Well, I like that." "Give me just reason then for thinking that too much efficiency is a dangerous thing."

"That's a challenge," said Tommy. "I accept it, and here's one good reason. The first thing a government that was too efficient would do would be to muzzle the press, so that nobody could complain of its efficiency. When you muzzle the press you extinguish liberty. And I tell you that a man rather would be poor, filthy and free than a rich slave. There's only one real difference between an aristocracy and a republic. The newspapers of a republic print the news and the newspapers of an aristocracy don't."

"According to you I'm not fit to live."

"Oh, Celestia."

"If you even own that I was going to ruin the world and that my death would leave the world as it is, would you wish me dead?"

"What an awful thought, Celestia!"

"Would you?"

"I would wish you somewhere where you could do no harm. I would keep you always in my arms and never let you go."

"Tommy, dear, you're so tiresome sometimes."

It was almost dark when Tommy tore himself away and went back to the town. Celestia would have liked to have sat on and on in the darkness, thinking long thoughts. But her reverie was interrupted by a voice, which its owner, without great effect, was evidently striving to make agreeable.

"Are you ready to talk a little business now? May I come in?"

"Yes, come in."

There was a reinsurance and petulance in Celestia's voice which did not help to assuage the jealous frenzy which possessed Professor Stilliter.

"Celestia," he said, "look at me and listen to me."

She looked and listened.

"This folly of yours, this weakness, is going to imperil the cause."

The words meant nothing to her. He was trembling with a passion growing more and more careless of consequences, he was exerting all the powers of his will to subdue her.

Presently her eyes faltered and half closed; her head dropped. An equally extraordinary change came into Stilliter's voice. It became at once greatly soft, caressing and triumphant.

"Come to me. Come close."

It was now very dark in the tent.

"Kiss me! Kiss me!"

At that moment from far off there sounded the whistle of a departing train. On one of the platforms stood a young woman, thickly veiled, who might have been mistaken for a lady's maid. She was waving one hand to a friend, who waved back, with the other she appeared to be somewhat significantly tapping the neck of her dress.

The friend on the platform looked surprisingly like Mrs. Gundersdorf.

CLIPPINGS FROM THE SNAGTOWN TORCHLIGHT

The trustees met at the Panther creek school building Friday afternoon to decide whether or not they would let the Panther creek teacher keep on teaching the school. The teacher was present at the meeting and delivered an address, taking up each of the trustees at a time and complimenting him very highly for his ability as a trustee. He declared that never in his life had he met a finer lot of trustees, nor a set of gentlemen with fairer minds and broader views, and was of the opinion that their equal could not be found. He wound up his address by announcing that he had written an article about them and was going to have it published in the Torchlight. The trustees then went into business session and unanimously chose the teacher for another term.

To the Business Men of Mt. Sterling

A young doctor, making a start in a small town, decided that to be prosperous he must look prosperous. He bought a new buggy and two good horses. Although he had only a few patients he always kept on the jump, attending to his patients' smallest needs. People began to notice this young doctor driving about town and they called him because he looked busy and prosperous. He got his start—a start that led to a comfortable practice.

Our town, like this doctor, must look prosperous to be prosperous. Clean streets, attractive store windows, well-painted buildings and dwellings give the prosperous air. Well-painted buildings are greatest of these.

ONE OF OUR NEEDS

While proud of our little city, we frankly admit it needs many things. One of them is a good gymnasium. Nothing would add more to the pleasure and health of our citizens. The question of amusement is a serious one. Amusement is a necessity and its form should be given very serious consideration. One should no more think of working constantly than of playing continually, yet both are essential to one's well being.

A gymnasium, under the supervision of one or all of the Bible classes of the city, or some other strong organization of men, would require no large financial outlay and is one of Mt. Sterling's real needs. Who will undertake to start this movement?

As proof of the Advocate's superiority as an advertising medium, we refer our readers to the many important advertisements appearing in this issue. The discerning advertiser wants his money's worth and endeavors to go where he will get it. It's a matter of business, that's all.

MAKES FINE IMPRESSION

Judge Samuel W. Greene, present County Judge of Jefferson county, opened the Democratic campaign here with an address at the Court House Monday afternoon at one o'clock.

In spite of the inclement weather and the confusion occasioned by the announcement at Democratic headquarters at Louisville, through the State press, that he would speak here Court Day, a representative audience greeted him.

Judge Greene is a native of Montgomery county, being a son of Mr. and Mrs. Lucien B. Greene, and our people are justly proud of him. His speech could hardly be considered a political speech, but ought more properly be classified as a cordial talk to his home people. He made a splendid impression on his hearers and it is needless to say, did the party much good. He was introduced, in a few well chosen words, by Dr. W. R. Thompson.

Mrs. Elizabeth Geering who has been sick for the past ten days, is getting along nicely.

Mr. J. M. McGuire, who fell from his wagon last week and broke his leg, is getting along very nicely.

Mrs. T. B. Arthur, who was operated on in Lexington last week, continues to improve and it is thought will soon be able to leave the hospital.

Blue Grass Farm at Public Auction

Mr. Roger Q. Drake, having decided to leave Mt. Sterling, has placed his farm in my hands for sale, and it will be sold to the highest and best bidder on Saturday, Oct. 9, 1915, at the hour of 10:30 o'clock a. m. on the premises.

The farm contains 100 acres of Good Blue Grass land and lays excellent, all of the land being available for cultivation. This farm is located on the Lulbegrud pike and adjoins the farms of Ed and Harve Prewitt and Anderson Bogie. The farm is all under good fencing and is one of the best watered places in the county, having four or five never-failing springs. The improvements consist of a five-room house, old-fashioned, stock barn, smoke-house, spring-house and a practically new 6-acre tobacco barn. About 70 acres of the farm is in cultivation this year and the balance in grass. This is one of the best small farms in the county, ideally located, about three miles from the city, on a good pike, and rural route and telephone line, and is within twenty minutes ride of schools and churches.

The farm will first be offered in two tracts, about 40 acres and the improvements, and then 60 acres unimproved. Then it will be offered as a whole and will be sold the way it brings the most money. This is your opportunity to buy a nice small farm at public outcry and the chance to make yourself independent by purchasing a home. You can make this farm pay for itself as it is in a high state of cultivation.

Possession of the farm will be given on March 1, 1916.

Terms of the sale—One-half cash; balance in 1 and 2 years. Deferred payments bearing 6 per cent interest, secured by lien on the lands.

Don't forget the date—Saturday, October 9, 1915, and the place—on the premises on the Lulbegrud pike at 10:30 o'clock a. m.

I will be pleased to show the property at any time to prospective purchasers.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. RECORD-BREAKING MILES

More fast miles will be trotted and paced over the Lexington track during the present meeting than have been recorded in the entire Grand Circuit. It is quite probable that the stallion record for pacers will be beaten and perhaps by two different horses, the race record for both trotters and pacers will be shattered if the weather permits of fast miles; the fastest two-year-old filly the world has ever seen will race at Lexington and if necessary, can reduce the mark for trotters of her age and sex; more than one mile in two minutes or better will be made during the meeting. Railroads have reduced the fare for round trip to one straight fare; all roads lead to Lexington during the autumn meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association. Kentuckians should not miss the opportunity to see the greatest trotting meeting of the year.

CAMPAIGN BOOK OUT

The Democratic campaign book for 1916 is out and copies of it have been sent from the headquarters at the Gilt House to prominent Democrats in all parts of Kentucky. The first batch went to those who are to take the stump that they have at hand the abundant material contained in the book and help them in preparing their speeches.

The book contains the record of the Democratic and Republican parties in both State and nation and gives first hand information concerning the stewardship of the Democrats. No facts are left out which will be valuable to show the contrast between the two parties in the management of State affairs and even the platforms of both for many years past are set forth. Particular stress is laid upon Republican extravagance.

Five speeches are contained in the book, being printed in full. They are the speeches of the gubernatorial candidate, A. O. Stanley, at Glasgow, on September 20th, and his speech delivered at Louisville on the subject of good roads, on September 16th; the speech of Senator Ollie James at the State convention and the convention speeches of the Hon. E. J. McDermott and the Hon. H. V. McChesney, also delivered at the State convention.

Among the issues discussed in the book, either in the platform of 1915, which is taken up section by section, or in speeches are taxation, the condition of the treasury, good roads, schools, "invisible government," public utilities, corrupt practices and franchise.

Stanley's personal and political record is covered in full, a good deal of space in the book being devoted to a description of his career as a public man and what he has accomplished in the State and in the halls of Congress at Washington. The book contains 196 pages and is bound in convenient form.

BUILDER OF KENTUCKY'S GREAT TROTTS

The man who made the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association what it now is, the richest and most influential organization of its kind in the Blue Grass. He built it up from a small breeders' association to one which has given millions of dollars to horsemen throughout the world either in stakes, purses or in maintaining the value of the trotter and pacer. The stakes are open to the world, the best horses are seen in its events and men and women from all over the civilized world meet during the autumn carnival. The president of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association, Ed. A. Tipton, began his connection with this organization as its secretary and today is at the head of what has been to Lexington and the Blue Grass region its greatest asset.

BRAINS AND HANDS

Everybody has brains and most everybody has hands; and the two combined should chase the wolf from any door.

A few people begin life by working with their hands, and as opportunity presents they throw their brains into the fray and make a success in their chosen vocation.

Later we speak of them as self-made men.

Others start with their hands, never use anything but their hands, and die as they began.

And we speak of them as failures. Now why can't everybody in this town use their brains as well as their hands?

Begin today to concentrate your thoughts upon performing your labors just a little better than you did yesterday, and each day strive to move upward on the ladder of efficiency.

When you do this you will find your boss behind and pushing you about as energetically as you are climbing. Through your efforts and his you will soon reach the top, and when the proper opportunity arrives you will become somebody else's boss.

You will then be fairly launched upon your career, and a careful exercise of the brain and a liberal use of your hands will lead you on to success in life.

Brains without hands seldom accomplish much, and hands without the use of brains will most assuredly never startle the world.

Brains and hands should work together and in complete harmony.

Together they will surmount the obstacles in life's pathway, but singly they will skate through existence on the fringe of adversity.

Many young boys are growing up in this town whose future is yet to be carved out. If taught the proper use of their brain power while young they will become self-made men of the future. If allowed to drift along until they arrive at a man's estate they will find greater use for the hand than for the brain. They may not become failures, but at best they will simply be cogs in the machinery of better men. Start your boy right and he will travel the rest of the way on his own mettle.

Don Venustiano Carranza! Even the name resembles a pugacious bull pup.

An infallible guide to a man's heart is his treatment of the dog and the cat.

Even at best, an excuse is never anything but an excuse.

Senff, at the earnest solicitation of the Democratic party leaders of this county, has accepted the chairmanship of the Democratic Campaign Committee of Montgomery county looking to the election of Hon. A. O. Stanley and the entire State ticket at the November election this fall, and will, at once appoint two committeemen from each precinct in the county and institute an active campaign in behalf of the ticket. He has been connected with many campaigns in his life and has indeed been successful. During the recent primary Mr. Senff was a staunch supporter of Mr. McChesney, but, we are glad to say, like all loyal Democrats, will give his whole support and untiring energy to his ticket.—Sentinel Democrat.

The Eternal City.

The Morning Telegraph, the Evening Journal, The Herald, The Mail and practically all of the New York city papers are loud in their praises of the great photoplay, "The Eternal City." The scenes are taken in Rome, Italy, and Hall Crane's great novel proves a great film success. Miss Pauline Frederick, considered New York's most beautiful woman, has the star role. Considerable trouble and great expense in dodging the government red tape in the production of this magnificent picture were incurred by the producers. Watch this paper for announcement of the date of "The Eternal City," which will be shown in this city at the Paramount Theatre, at an early date.
